TOTAL = 17 credits[6]

[1] This can be satisfied through ANY bioethics related course.
[2] One option that is always available is Independent Study (1-3 credits). A second option is to take a weekend seminar and focus the paper on a health law topic that intersects with the topic of the seminar.
[3] These are not offered only on the weekend but are offered in a highly compressed format.
[4] The plan is to offer 3 health law electives each J-term in an online asynchronous format.
[5] If the experiential requirement is satisfied through an externship or clinic, those credits count toward the 6 required elective credits. Instead of a clinic or externship, the experiential learning requirement can be satisfied through pro bono hours or job shadowing per the certificate guidebook. In exceptional circumstances, the experiential learning requirement can be waived in recognition of significant relevant work experience.
[6] If you pursue the separate Healthcare Compliance Certificate, six credits of that certificate's requirements can satisfy the six electives credits for this certificate. The net effect is that the HCCC requires only 5 additional credits. Unfortunately, the HCCC is not available on the weekend.

This is a tentative guide. The final version will be incorporated into the new Health Law Certificate guide. April 14, 2014
